Diane Keels: model on the move

Paris, France, watch out. Diane Keels is coming. After years of hard work, the 26-year-old model has gone from shaking so much during fashion shows that her clothes moved, to being able to say, "I know I'm good."

Although this evening dress was made in New York, its hand-painted designs give it an Oriental look.

"I'm going to Paris at the end of September," Ms. Keels said. "I plan on making the rounds of all the designers trying to get jobs modeling in their shows."

"I'll either be a big smash over there or I'll be nothing. I believe it's all a matter of being in the right place at the right time."

But behind her belief in luck is a year of modeling school, three years of trying to get modeling jobs while working odd jobs selling, and almost three years working as a model.

It all involved becoming mentally as well as physically prepared for a modeling profession.

Ms. Keels said when she finished modeling school in 1972, she really wasn't mentally ready to work as a model. She thinks she may have been too young.

Her big break came three years later when she was hired by Saks Fifth Avenue to do eight staff shows.

"I actually cried when I got outside the door after the interview. I was going to start out with a job at the top," Ms. Keels said.

Modeling for Saks has given the Auburn Heights resident a chance to do runway shows for such famous designers as Bill Blass, Emilio Pucci, Adolfo and Noriko. Recently Bill Blass introduced Ms. Keels as "the next Billy Blair" (a top model from New York).

The mother of an eight-year-old son, Mike, she says she is a quiet person. But as soon as she puts on clothes to model, her face and body take on a different look. She smiles, she pouts, she moves sensuously or roughly, according to the fashions.

"When I put a garment on, I just absorb into the material. I get so excited. That's why I want to specialize in runway modeling; there is so much self-expression involved."

She also enjoys showing off her body. Weighing 116 pounds, the five-foot-nine model said she's very skinny but "not sickening," just lean. "I'm thin but shapely. The same with my legs. I like to show them. They're so thin that people look twice, but the second time they see how nicely shaped they are," she said with a smile.

Just being thin isn't enough for a model. Ms. Keels works at staying firm by running every night for the lower part of her body and playing tennis for the upper part.

She said she's at her peak physical condition right now and plans on maintaining her exercise and skin care routines so she'll look her best when she tackles Paris.
