

And furs are to enjoy every day

Yes, winter is coming this year, and many fashion-conscious men and women could spruce up a sparse, fall wardrobe with one of this year's fun, casual, and versatile furs.

At the recent press showing of Hudson's fall fur collection, the big news was versatility. Furs are no longer made to come out of the closet for weddings and formal engagements only. They are made to be worn as easily with tweeds as with chiffon.

The new furs also blend well with the new fall colors. They go well with everything from the palest beiges to the deepest blacks.

Popular colors this year with the designers are the new grays, and they are included in the J. L. Hudson line.

This gray flannel mink by Chloe with a dyed-to-match fox collar would blend beautifully with the new russets, golds and deep, dark colors.

Furs that can be worn for all occasions are another important part of this year's collection. A fur like this stroller coat of tanuki, a new Japanese fox, done by Oscar de la Renta can easily be worn to a fall football game or a formal night club. It has flattering narrow horizontal stripes with a tuxedo front and bottom border.

By far, the biggest news this year is the reversible fur—an item that can go a long way to stretch a meager, outer-wear wardrobe.

Some of these chill chasers are lined with a material, like this ranch mink cape by Catherine Guilbert which reverses to black poplin for rain or daytime wear and ties at the neck with a mink scarf. This must be a life saver when a sudden fall shower hits.

Many of the new furs are unlined, and when worn fur side in—with the leather side of the pelts showing—are practical and versatile.

This lightweight Autumn Haze jacket, another done by Oscar de la Renta, is one of these comparatively inexpensive furs. The greater insulating qualities of the fur worn next to the body, may serve to warm more than one cold body this winter.

Unlined furs are less expensive than the lined furs, even as they increase the wardrobe times two.

For those who want a fun fur, as well as a versatile fur, Hudson's has added an entire line of hooded furs, flings, and coats with "something extra."

The something extra in Catherine Guilbert's version of the fanny sweater is the knit sleeves and blouson shaping. The natural coyote piece has a zipper front closure.

Her sleeveless vest, in pieced red fox, trimmed with fluffy white fox is fun, yet practical. It will work with everything from wool pants to jeans or evening wear.

Just as the women will wear their furs more casually this year, the men will wear theirs for all occasions. In the largest men's showing of furs in Hudson's history, the fashion co-ordinator stressed that men no longer

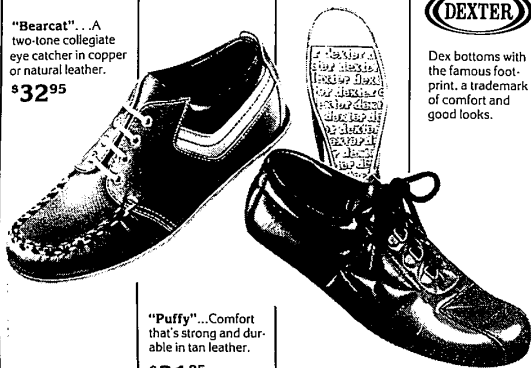

Marmot in a diamond pattern fashions a man's coat that reverses to leather.
