

Smokey is taking pictures

CB radio operators driving through the Wayne State University area of Detroit weren't kidding if they reported Smokey taking pictures on Anthony Wayne Drive. WSU's Public Safety Department, concerned about pedestrians on the urban campus, bought a radar gun and began issuing tickets—147 of them in 21 days, using radar only sporadically. WSU police outfitted an officer in a bear costume and put him on radar patrol to dramatize the problem and make drivers aware. Patrolman Henry Villaret drew the short straw and was tapped for the assignment.

Today's Investor

Invest in Minnesota

Q. I recently met a friend who moved into my town from Minneapolis and he said if I really wanted to make some good investments, I should look at companies that were started or headquartered in Minneapolis because they were the best companies in the country.

A. Your friend is giving you good advice. I don't know if the vast array of excellent Minneapolis-based companies are the best in the country, but certainly there are many Minneapolis companies from very small ones up to giant Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. that are excellent investments. The people in the area have proven to have a great deal of technical and business ability and have turned this talent to the development of many companies that have had excellent earnings records. George A. Nicholson, Jr., who writes for Better Investing, recently did a column on a particular company in that area, Bemis Co. As in most outstanding companies, Bemis' success seems to be based on the skill and drive of its management. Nicholson's story does a fine job of showing the skill of this particular management and the characteristics of the Minneapolis population which seems to produce above-average talent.
