

Class explores 'erroneous' zone

Are you ready to explore your "Erroneous Zones"? Are you in the middle of one of those "Passages" in your life, made famous by a bestselling book of the same name?

Some Southfield people are involved in helping people deal with their "erroneous zones" and "passages" at the Continuum Center at Oakland University.

The center is offering two January programs that apply these self-help principles to your life.

The six-session programs called "Beginning Personal Growth" are scheduled for 7:30-10:30 p.m. Mondays, Jan. 16 to Feb. 27, at the Church of our Saviour, 6655 Middlebelt in West Bloomfield, and from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Jan. 24 through Feb. 14, at the Oakland Center on Oakland University campus.

Jim Reiter, a Southfield attorney, is one of the trained group leaders who will work in the program in West Bloomfield. His wife, Sydney Reiter, works on the staff at the Oakland Center in a special department geared for older adults and is funded by the Administration on Aging.

A second Southfield couple working on the program are Jim and Judy Hoppin.

Continuum Center counselor, Judy Schneider of Franklin, will work in the West Bloomfield program, along with coordinator Kitty Dubin of Birmingham, and Frank Saylor of Franklin.

"People come to our program because they really are going through the kind of passages described by Gail Sheehy in her book," said Ms. Schneider. "It may be a very specific passage like facing a divorce or a new job, or it may be a search for new options."

There's also been a lot of talk about the book "Erroneous Zones" by Wayne Dyer, and those zones are real, according to the Franklin counselor. She explained that when people work in a small group with trained leaders, they learn a lot of things about themselves. They learn that persons are their own basic resource, and have capabilities to be developed, and can learn to express their feelings.

Women often find themselves moving toward the world of work, said Ms. Schneider, while men often find themselves moving toward the world of people.

Mrs. Schneider has a BA in psychology from Colby College in Maine and a MA in guidance and counseling from Oakland University.

Personal growth programs offered by the center are designed by a trained staff of psychologists and counselors and are partially funded by the National Institute of Mental Health and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

For more information on these programs, phone the Continuum Center at Oakland University in Rochester or phone 577-3033.
