DICK BENSEK

As with the great culinary tradition of China, recipes have been handed down by word of mouth; these are still no printed cookery books. In each case it is the judgment of the individual cook that balances the different ingredients of a dish and seasons them with pleasant and subtle spices and herbs. There is a great reverence for food and devoted care and love in its preparation. In countries where so many millions have starved, cooking is part of the ritual of life, not something to be skimmed, shirked, or avoided.

We have a tradition of preparing and serving only the finest of food. Dine at the DANISH INN, 22305 Grand River Ave., 476-5320 today, where you will enjoy Roast Prime Rib of Beef, Danish Inn special-Frinkadeller or some of the other Danish specialties. Decorated cakes always available for Birthdays and Anniversaries. Credit Cards Honored.

HELPFUL HINT: Beets and red cabbage need a teaspoon of white vinegar or lemon juice to preserve their color.
