

Seminary Prep School Starts Residence Hall For 300

Ground will be broken for a new $2 million preparatory residence hall on the Orchard Lake School campus on Sunday, July 13. The ceremonies get under way at 2 p.m.

The Very Rev. Walter J. Ziembka, superintendent of St. Mary's Preparatory, Orchard Lake, will bless the site and shovel the first spadeful of dirt for the new building which has a scheduled completion date of September 1970.

The family and representatives of the corporation, trustees, alumni, ladies auxiliary, and the church will be present.

Form 5-Day Clubs

Five-day clubs have been organized for children of elementary grades in eight Farmington area homes by Bethel Baptist Church.

These are clubs that meet five consecutive days for about one hour to hear Bible stories, sing, learn Scripture and enjoy the presentations of four teachers from the Child Evangelism Fellowship. The organization is interdenominational and international in scope and extends into the 50 states, Canada and 80 other countries.

Bethel Baptist groups will meet July 14 through 18. Neighborhood centers for 5-10 groups will be at 22996 Hayden in Warner Farm, 36080 Heather in Chatham Hills, 34800 Edmond and 20904 Parker in Farmington Township.

All children in kindergarten through grade six are invited and their parents are welcome to visit.

Older students in grades seven through 12 are invited to special activities at the church during the same July 14-18 week. Their events will begin with a "Bigger and Better Deal" July 14 at 8:45 p.m.

Activities for the teenagers July 15-18 will be at 7 p.m. and will include a swim party, a film on the sun, softball game, and a homemade ice cream social.

For further information the pastor, The Rev. James R. Stewart, can be contacted.

He will report on missionary activities which he supervises in the Port Limon, Costa Rica, area.

Pastor Walter Ballagh will speak at the 7 p.m. Gospel hour and music will be provided by Mrs. Myrna King, Lina Smith, the Chorale Choir and the church orchestra.

The nursery will be open for all services.

Fund raising for the interfaith chapel to serve Northville State Hospital's 1300 patients is moving into final stages as construction of the chapel progresses.

A committee including the Rev. Stanley Kukulski, the Rev. George Jerome, Rabbi Sol Grunin and Christian Science Church, representative Burt Wolf, joined in public expression of appreciation of past efforts. They also called for help with preparations for the Oct. 1 open house when additional efforts to raise needed funds are planned to effect completion of the project.

Rev. White To First UMC

REV. HUGH C. WHITE

A clergyman well-known in Plymouth and other parts of the metropolitan area is the new minister of the First United Methodist Church of Farmington.

He is the Rev. Hugh C. White, from 1963 to 1966 pastor of the First Methodist Church of Plymouth and since then superintendent of the First district of the church organization.

Born in Evanston, Ill. and educated in the public schools of Chicago at Crown Grove, Ill., he is a graduate of North Central College and Northwestern University's Garrett Theological Seminary.

Besides his service in Plymouth and as superintendent, he has served as a social pastor in the Euclid Avenue Methodist Church in Oak Park, Ill. and pastor of Fairdale Methodist Church near Rockford, Ill.

In the Detroit area he was pastor of the McCabe Methodist Church and organized the Grosse Pointe Methodist Church where he served 15 years. He also served as pastor of the Franklin Community Methodist Church before going to Plymouth.

In 1955, on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the pastorate at Grosse Pointe, Rev. and Mrs. White were sent to Japan on a missionary assignment under auspices of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church.

The work they started there was at Kobe. The church is now considered one of the most active Christian churches in that part of Japan.

Rev. White has been active in many conference assignments and is presently a member of the world service and finance commissions of the Detroit conference.

Mrs. White, the former Doris Hays, is a graduate of Southwestern University in Texas. Before her marriage she was a Wesley Foundation Director at Huntsville, Texas.

The Whites have two sons, Stuart, a junior at Kent State University, and Jeffrey, a senior at Farmington High School. The family lives in the parsonage, 22320 Cass.

They Say 'Hello' In 150 Languages

When the Peace Corps' Deputy Director recently visited a training group headed for East Africa, he had to eat in a room separated from the trainees because he couldn't speak their language.

In fact, they were learning two languages: Swahili and Luganda, and the rules for English in class, the dining hall and on the playing field.

This is the agency's vaunted high-intensity method (or Language Saturation Technique, sometimes known as LST), in which trainees actually spend a full month in class on nothing but language -- six days a week, eight hours a day -- before they even begin their regular training. They are urged, and sometimes required, to speak only the new language the rest of the time.

IN DEVELOPING an extensive and professional language program, the Peace Corps has become the largest language training institution in the country, and the biggest producer of language training materials.

In the agency's first year, 1961, it taught 16 languages; since then it has taught more than 150. In the last three years it spent more than $1 million for language material development. Many languages spoken by volunteers never were taught before in this country; some never were taught beyond the tribe itself.

THE PEACE CORPS' success in teaching languages developed from the premise that basic communication is essential to effective overseas experience. A volunteer can't help someone if he can't talk to him.

Sufficient documentation is available to indicate that the effort has not been in vain. Mainly, the Peace Corps' success is due to the volunteers themselves.

Recently, the level reached by Peace Corps trainees in several fields -- language proficiency, cultural understanding, and speaking -- was compared with the oral ability of selected college language majors.

Dr. John B. Carroll of the Educational Testing Service at Princeton, N.J., made the study for Harvard University. He tested 2,700 seniors, 2,604 of whom had an average listening and speaking proficiency in French and Spanish after four years that was comparable to the level attained by Peace Corps trainees who had spent only four weeks in learning these languages.

With this approach, the trainees are urged to speak the language as much as possible. Instructors encourage them to learn the language's basic structural forms that correlate closely with the spoken, instead of the literary form of language. Thus, when they practice, trainees use actual dialogue rather than memorize vocabulary lists.

The intensity with which the language is taught, however, remains the most crucial difference. In addition to the new saturation approach, the time spent on language during the regular training period has increased. In the early years, instruction was limited to about 100 hours in the standard 12-week training program. Now volunteers receive a minimum of 300 hours, and as much as 500 in some instances.

MANY EDUCATORS are adapting the agency's approach to the standard college curriculum.

Dartmouth, which has trained volunteers since the agency began, is introducing French and Spanish courses that require 14 hours of class work a week. This enables students to complete their language requirements in two trimesters. The school also plans to offer freshmen a one-month, high-intensity course in French.

"Imagine the boon to language instruction," says a Peace Corps official, "if college students could learn to speak a language in four to six weeks well enough to begin literature courses."

Many schools benefit, too, by having linguists on their faculties work with the Peace Corps' language programs. More than 50 universities have helped develop the new language tests, providing many scholars with invaluable field work. Now, many universities, as well as other government agencies, are using the tests in their regular courses.

AN UNANTICIPATED boon has been the experience gained by volunteers in using the languages abroad for two years. Many volunteers are returning to do graduate work in linguistics; 20 enrolled at the University of Indiana alone last year. A few already teach at the college level, and some have written new language test materials.

The goal of such intensive preparation remains effective performance overseas. "One basic characteristic of the 'Bible American' is being erased by the volunteer: He is no longer 'longue-tied,'" says an agency official. "Peace Corps Volunteers are trained to speak as equals with people throughout the world who remember too well the disdain and depreciation expressed in the linguistic ethno-centrism of the old colonial powers."

Peace Corps Has 7 Successful Years

The Peace Corps reached a milestone in its short seven-year history late in 1968 when the 25,000th volunteer completed service and returned to the United States.

There are now twice as many former Volunteers as Volunteers currently overseas, reports Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn.

What happens when they come home?

Statistics compiled by the Peace Corps indicate that about half of the former Volunteers change career plans after two years overseas, a partial explanation for the large percentage (about 38 per cent) who currently are continuing their education, Vaughn says.

Not counting those in school, more than one in every three returned Volunteers immediately become teachers--double the number who had intended to teach prior to joining the Peace Corps.

VAUGHN SAYS an obvious reason for the increased demand by U.S. school systems for former Peace Corps Volunteers is the shortage of qualified teachers, particularly of those willing to teach in ghetto schools.

"One another reason is the recognition by school officials that the Peace Corps experience provides a volunteer teacher with an approach, a way of going about things, that's a vital first step to teaching."

The Philadelphia school system, for instance, offered contracts to 15 Volunteers sight unseen to teach in inner-city schools there. At the end of the last school year, Robert W. Blackburn, architect of the unprecedented recruitment effort, testified before a House of Representatives committee that "we regard the Volunteers as the single best source of top-flight educators available to us anywhere."

New York State has established an Office of Peace Corps Affairs designed specifically to attract former Volunteers into its school system.

The DISTRICT of Columbia school district was interested enough in Volunteers that it sent two officials around the world with contracts in hand for Peace Corps teachers who were completing service. They received applications from 15 Volunteers and signed up 30 on the spot.

Another third of returned Volunteers currently employed are working for federal, state and local governments -- heavily concentrated in community action projects, Headstart, VISTA and other anti-poverty programs.

John Arango, 30, former Volunteer in Columbia, is special assistant to the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity's regional office in San Francisco. "Many Volunteers seek out administrative positions," Arango says, "because they feel they have gained ideas about the world today and they want the power to implement them."

Others are working on the grass-roots level, similar to the type of work they did overseas as Volunteers. Dave Dawley, 26, a former Volunteer in Honduras, helped one of Chicago's toughest street gangs, the Conservative Vice Lords, incorporate itself as a nonprofit organization working "to build, not destroy" Chicago's West Side.

The former Volunteer serves as liaison between the Vice Lords and foundations which provide "seed grants" for economic development projects initiated by the 8,000-member organization.
