

How Crime Lab Identified Pistol

(Above) Earl Leedle, State Police crime laboratory specialist in charge of the Plymouth lab on S. Main Street, holds the .22 caliber revolver while looking at the slug and cartridge. Through the efforts of the State Police, the gun was identified as the one that was used in the murder of

Margaret Phillips a week earlier. It was fished out of the river by skin divers Thursday morning and quickly taken to the Plymouth lab. (LEFT) Leedle holds the slug between his fingers as he points out the markings and other identifications used by State Police. (Observer photos by Vince Wittek)

 (Right) Leedle fires slug into a specially constructed cylinder filled with gauze-like strips to take the force of the shot. (Below) He carefully removes the slug from the stringy material and then gets ready for the final tests.
