GM Displays Latest Ideas

In Auto Power

The first Detroit display of 18 special General Motors vehicles powered by gas turbine, steam, electric, zinc-air battery, and hybrid systems — as well as experimental piston engines with reduced air pollutant characteristics — is open in the first-floor central exhibit room of the General Motors Building, W. Grand Blvd. and Cass Ave.

The "state of the art" show — called "Progress of Power" — is a comprehensive report on the latest results of General Motors' investigation of various possible forms of automotive power.

The cars and power systems on display are working experimental models developed by General Motors and designed to illustrate current technological progress by GM scientists and engineers and their consultants in various fields.
