More than three months have passed since 300 students picketed at North Farmington High against the dress code. So the Farmington Board of Education is looking for fresh perspectives on the issue—i.e., whether or not schools should impose dress rules—and has scheduled a public hearing for Aug. 11.

Alto Vagnozzi, in his first meeting as a board trustee Monday night, proposed the dialogue between board, administration, parents and students on the dress code add the further problem of the communications gap."

Richard Frankel, also in his first meeting, seconded the move.

"I would hope this could be the first step toward codifying student rules," he explained. "We have to face up to future problems as well as today's problems."

Consensus of the board favored the public hearing. In March the board supported the administration in suspending picketers pending conferences with their parents. All suspended students were eventually re-admitted.

Three members of that seven-member board, however, have since been replaced.

"That is unfair and uncalled for. The board, of course, has the authority to do what it wants . . . I will say no more."

Students and teachers at NFHS recently teamed up to acquire a plaque honoring Hunt.

The student council also called the auditorium Hunt Memorial Auditorium which it now officially is.

OTHER BOARD action

Monday, Vagnozzi and Frankel led a studios and lengthy assault on the bi-monthly purchase list.

Vagnozzi, for example, noted two stainless steel blocks for the new North Farmington pool were $733.92 over an original estimate of $284.08.

William Prisk, business manager, agreed to deter the blocks until he could investigate the 300 per cent price jump.

BUT NEAR the end of the meeting, Washburn reintroduced the subject. "I hate to belabor this," he said, "but I wonder if we know how the students and staff at North Farmington really feel about this."

Lichtman, serving as president pro tem, however rejected Washburn's suggestion to again postpone the decision.

Then Dr. Roderick Smith, district superintendent, interrupted. "How DO you know what North Farmington's staff does feel about this?" he challenged. "I wonder if you're willing to listen to the staff."

Bloomberg countered: "It's worthless to ask the staff their opinion since we know they're not going to oppose their superintendent's stand."
Smith spluttered backangrily,
