BPW tintypes in festival

When the Business and Professional Women's Club gave up its German dinner at the Plymouth Fall Festival, members promised to come up with an interesting alternative. And they did.

They will have an oldtime photography booth where patrons may have their pictures taken. The result will be a brown-tone tintype in an old-fashioned frame.

BPW members will have an assortment of costumes of the 1800s on hand which will be easy to slip over festival-going attire. The vintage clothing will add an authentic touch to the photographs.

Tintypes, or ferrotypes, were popular in the mid-19th century, and later. The new method is a Polaroid process and the prints will not fade away.

Club members decided the quaint photos would be excellent gifts or souvenirs of the festival.

Tintype—with frame— will cost $3.50.
