Teach Children Safety

Parents of young Observerland children, returning to school, can help safeguard their children's lives, if they teach their youngsters to practice the following rules laid down by the Traffic Safety Association of Detroit:

1. Children should follow the safe route to and from school mapped out by their school.
2. They should always obey the directions of the safety patrol boys or the civilian crossing guards at the corners.
3. They should never run into the street, and especially in midblock between parked cars.

"The return-to-school period each year is almost always marred by a senseless, tragic accident," said Garret W. Griffin, association managing director. "These accidents generally happen to children starting kindergarten and through the third or fourth grade. If drivers are alert for the small youngsters and expect them to do the unexpected, these accidents can be avoided."
