ING, TREASURE.

"Jacqueline of Golden River" is a romanoe of love, adventure and fighting—the basis of all good romane. It is in preachment in story form; no sexproblem novel; no propaganda under the guise of fiction. It is a real romanoe and its purpose is to entertain. And, as if love, anough, a most engrossing mystery of hidden treasure giveanough, a most engrossing mystery of hidden treasure giveanough, a most engrossing mystery of hidden treasure givereason for the plot and action.
The heroine is besutiful, fascinating—and mysterious. The hero, freed from city drudgery typ a legacy, is ripe for adderyture and when it comes embraces it whois-heartedly. And such an adventure as it proves to bel it begins in a big city

A Dog and a Damsel.

As I sat on a bench in Madison square, after half past eleven in the evening a dog came frotting up to we, stopped at my feet and whined. There is nothing remarkable in having a strange dog run to one, nor in seeing the creature rise on its hind legs and paw at you for notice and a carses. Only, this happened to be an Eaklino dog.

I stroked the beast which is the contraction of the contr

I stroked the beast, which lay down at my feet, raising its bend sometimes of the thing of a little way and coming back to tug at the lower edge of my overcoat. But my mind was too much occupied for me to take any but a performance of the complete for the comp with Simon Leroux.

Leroux was a parish politician from some place near Quebec, and his clean-shaven, wrinkled face was as hard and mean as any city boss in the United States. He and old Tom used to be closeted together for bours at a time.

a time.

I never liked the man and I never eared for Carson's business ways. I was glad to leave him the day after my legacy artived.

My plans were vague. I had been occupying, at a low rental, a tiny apartment consisting of two rooms, a bath and what is called a "kitchen-eite", at the top of an old building in Trenth street which was about to building in Trenth street which was about to take boat for Jamanien. I wanted to think and plan.

The Eskimo day was growing unserved to the street which was about to take boat for Jamanien. I wanted to think and plan.

Evidently it wished use to accompany it, and I wondered why its master was and how it came to be there. I rose and followed the beast, which showed its eager delight by running head of me, turning round at times to bark, and thea continuing on its way with a precision which showed me that it was cortain of, its destination.

The dog turned down a street in the Wrentles, ran on a few yards, bounded up a flight of stiften steps and because can be a flight of stiften at the way with a precision which showed me that it was apparently smoty.

This place I knew by reputation. It was Jim Daly's notorious but document to what down.

So the creature's master was inside Daly's, and it wished me to get him out. I looked in some disappointment, at the closed doors and surned away. I meant to go home, and I had proceeded about three paces when this hock clicked. I stopped. The front door opened cautiously, and the gray head of Jim's early been more than was of a fair brown, the features modeled upon a faviless throat that gleemed white beneath and the state of the depending, its head poleded upon a faviless throat that gleemed white beneath and the gray beneath a was gleemed white beneath and the gray beneath a meter place and white beneath and the gray and a favile and the gray and a

She carried a subte muff, too, and under these furs was a dress of unstylish fusilion and cut that contrasted curiously with them. I thought that those loose sleeves had passed away before the inheteeath cehtury died. In one hand she carried a bag, into which she was stuffing a large roll of bills. She passed so close to me that her dress brushed my overcoat, and for an instant her eyes met mine. There was a look in them that startled me—terror and belplessness, as though she had suffered some beaumining shock which made her actions more automatic than consclous.

I was bewildered. What was a girl like that doing in Daly's at half past

And then, before I could get upon my feet again the dog had leaped at the throat of the man with the patch and sent him sumbling backward. Before he reasvered like balance I was at the other man, striking, out right and left.*

But gray and the solding, is have eight to school. Fortunately for se the mob was too bustly engroused in its exercit to hear har words.

So I drew her arm through nine and we hurried toward Stata areane, where we took an uptown car.

We had reached Herald square when it occurred to me that my companion did not seem to know her destination. So we descended there, in and forgotten the dog, but now the beautiful creature-came bounding to my the second through the word in the course of the second through the seco
