Government Victory Show At The Michigan State Fair

Detroit (Special):—Combined exhibits of several United States Government departments, to be exhibited at the Michigan State Fair, Detroit, August 29 to September 7, will comprise a gigantic victory show. They will display many of the tools of war used by the Army and Navy in late world's conflict, and a large number of trophies captured on the battlefields of Europe by American troops.

A special corp of men have been at work for months, sorting the great amount of booty brought back from abroad and selecting an exhibit that will portray to the people of this country the titanic task accomplished by the boys in khaki. The Michigan State Fair has been selected by the government officials as an exhibiting place on account of the fact that it brings together more residents of the state than any other medium.

Detroit (Special):—Fifty troopers of the Michigan State Constabulary, headed by Colonel Roy C. Vandercrook, will camp on the Michigan State Fair grounds during the ten days of the exposition, August 29 to September 7. The troops will put on daily drills and will police the grounds. The Michigan State Troops have demonstrated, during the past year, the benefit to the state of such an organization. During the liquor running epidemic their services at the state line near Monroe were invaluable. They have shown their ability in fighting the forest fires of the northern part of the state and have been the means of saving millions of dollars worth of Michigan's natural resources. Col. Vandercrook has built up the organization until it has a national reputation for efficiency and is the pattern after which many states are establishing similar organizations. The upper picture shows an officer receiving orders from his superior and the lower is Colonel Vandercrook, head of the constabulary.

A Game for High Stakes!

Billy Stanway, American rancher, loved the pretty young granddaughter of a wealthy old Spanish overlord of a neighboring estate sufficiently to gamble every chance for her affection and the good will of the grandee on the roll of the

Dice of Destiny

When the old Senor was mysteriously abducted and his captors demanded a heavy ransom for his return, Billy's native instinct told him that things were not just as they seemed, but the end justified the desperate chance he took.
