

Bill Atkinson calls his collection of spring separates "The Right of Spring" in honor of Igor Stravinsky. He has transposed Stravinsky's music into his spring collection, shedding winter's coverings to reveal the new delicate spring growth and the softening of the silhouette. Atkinson, often referred to as a Renaissance man, is remembered in Michigan for his long association as design director for Glen of Michigan, which won him acclaim for his concepts of women's sport-clothes. In 1958, he was named fashion designer of the year. In 1973, he opened Bill Atkinson, Ltd., and has since designed the uniforms for Amtrak's and the Hilton hotels' staffs. Shown here is a baby-soft chamois cardigan worn over a crepe blouse with a wool crepe circle skirt in low-keyed desert tones.
