May 11, 12, and 13 marks the eighth annual invitational art exhibition at Somerset Mall. This event attracts artists from both the U.S. and Canada.

This year, 32 artists have been selected by the six-man committee of jurors to exhibit in 11 categories. The six jurors have been reviewing the works of hundreds of artists since early January.

The committee is comprised of Larry Cressman, Kathy Dambach, James Gilbert, Urban Jepena—all professional artists. Louis G. Redstone makes the sixth member. Redstone is the architect who designed Somerset Mall, author of three books and a watercolor artist.

There will be sculptural work in stone-ware, porcelain and raku by Kathy Dambach, Michael Duvall, John Glick, Phyllis Ihrman, Jan Jacque, Susanne Stephenson and Alan Vignand. Glick was among the potters whose dinnerware was selected by First Lady Rosalyn Carter for a luncheon for the wives of Senators.

Three weavers present a wide variety of techniques, materials and products. Both Urban Jepena and Lori Christmasteer (her real name is Tannenbaum) are on the staff at Wayne State University and James Gilbert and Jepena both have commissioned work at the new Renaissance Center.

THERE ARE six metalsmiths exhibiting this year. Robert Fisher and Natalie Silvers-tein both do enamel work in jewelry, plates and boxes. Hannalore Gabriel, Douglas Barthel, Lee Peck and Gary Stefani will primarily be showing their most current pieces of Southfield students will have no shortage of reading material if a list of 84 textbooks proposed for use in the school district is approved.

The list, which will be considered by the Southfield Board of Education in a few weeks, ranges from art to reading to sex education.

Some of the textbooks, if approved, will be used to meet the needs of new courses, school officials report. Other books will be used to update or replace obsolete textbooks now in use. Actual purchases, officials say, will be subject to the amount of money available and to compliance with state law.

Proposed art textbooks include "Animation" by Preston Blair and "Shootout on the Silver Screen" by E.F. Martin.

A new English textbook and a new journalism book are proposed for the middle schools.

Other books for use in high school English classes include "Candide" by Voltaire, "Finnegan's Wake" by James Joyce, "The Gods Themselves" by Isaac Asimov, "The Moon is a Harsh Mistress" by Robert Heinlein, "Dune" by Frank Herbert, "Water-ship Down" by Richard Adams and "Them" by Joyce Carol Oates.

Other English class books include: "Efficient Reading," "Introduction to the Short Story," "Creative Writing," "Mastering the Sentence in Seven Steps" and "Sports Literature."

Foreign language books proposed for use at the high school level range from Arabic to French.

Home economic textbooks may include "Guide to Modern Meals" and "Here's to Good Health."

There also are a number of proposed textbooks on small appliance repairs, health mathematics, algebra, consumer math, and several reading books.

In the area of social studies, textbooks that will be considered include "The Old World," "Decision-Making in American Government" and "Consumer Economic Problems."
