Prof's book lists repression

A comprehensive study of U.S. government repression of political dissidents during the last century was recently published by Robert J. Goldstein of Birmingham, an assistant professor in Oakland University's political science department.

Goldstein's book, "Political Repression in Modern America: From 1870 to the Present," is a comprehensive history of governmental repression directed against American political dissidents during the last 100 years. Beginning with a discussion of discrimination against the labor movement in the late 19th century, the book comes up to date with a discussion of recent abuses by U.S. intelligence agencies.

Editor sought as witness, need not testify, says judge

Wayne County Circuit Judge Robert Cunningham has ruled that Westland Observer editor Sandra Armbruster cannot be forced to testify in a lawsuit filed against four Westland city council members.

Cunningham also has ordered that the subpoenas requiring Ms. Armbruster to surrender her notes be quashed. "The need for information doesn't outweigh first amendment rights," said Cunningham as he announced his ruling Monday.

The Westland Observer is one of 12 Observer & Eccentric Newspapers.

Ms. Armbruster had been subpoenaed to tell what she knew about an unpublished Feb. 11 meeting between four city council members—Robert Wagner, Gail McKnight, Richard Stempien and Nancy Neal—and Mayor Thomas Taylor at State Sen. William Faust's (D-Westland) house.

The lawsuit, filed by two Westland residents, contends that the council members violated the state Open Meeting Act.

Ms. Armbruster was subpoenaed by the plaintiffs.

Those present at the meeting in question have acknowledged that such a gathering occurred, but all deny that the law was violated. The act prohibits closed meetings by a council majority held to discuss public policy or to take a vote.

Filing the suit were Anne DeSmit and John Auten who had been active in a recall movement against the same four council members mentioned in the lawsuit.

"Although the (plaintiffs') attorneys did take a statement from a reporter from another newspaper, we decided to fight this subpoena based on principle. We believe it violated first amendment rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution," said Ms. Armbruster. In her oral presentation, attorney

Jane Souris, representing Mrs. DeSmit and Auten in the suit, said they had taken statements under oath from the four council members involved.

"We haven't gotten the information we needed from the four council members. We need the information from Ms. Armbruster," said Ms. Souris.

Don McVay, an attorney for Ms. Armbruster from the firm of Keywell and Rosenfeld which represents Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, argued in a motion to quash the subpoena that to require Ms. Armbruster to testify would jeopardize her first amendment rights to gather and disseminate news.
