Big IFs apply in refreezing

You can refreeze meat if it has been thawed in the refrigerator, if it is still fresh and good—an if it is still cold an still has some ice cystals left.

You do need to recognize though that each time a cut of meat is frozen and thawed, you lose some of the goodness you paid for to begin with.

There's a drying tendency, due to loss of juices, in the process of thawing and refreezing. The better method though is to keep the thawed meat in the refrigerator and cook it as soon as possible.
