

House wants veto over HUD rules

Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on a major roll call vote immediately preceding the Fourth of July recess.

HOUSE

CONGRESSIONAL VETO Adopted, 241 for and 140 against, an amendment giving either house of Congress power to veto certain Department of HUD regulations. It was attached to HR 12433, a HUD bill awaiting final passage after the July 4 recess.

The regulation in question, authored by HUD Secretary Patricia Harris, directs that a certain portion of a city's annual community development block grant be spent on projects for low- and middle-income persons. Many congressmen object to that directive.

The constitutional issue spotlighted by this vote is what Congress can do to countermand executive branch regulations it dislikes. The executive branch writes thousands of regulations each year in implementing the general language of laws enacted by Congress.

Rep. Garry Brown, R-Mich., the sponsor, said: "The executive branch has used its regulation-writing authority not to flesh out the law but to undermine the law. It has used its authority to thwart the will of Congress."

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Tex., an opponent, said: "Congress is not a pitiful, helpless giant in its dealings with the bureaucracy. We have ample means and powers to see that the legislation we enact is implemented the way we want it to be."

Members voting "yea" favored the amendment. Reps. William Ford, D-15, James Blanchard, D-18, William Broomfield, R-19, and Carl Pursell, R-2, voted "yea."

Reps. David Bonior, D-12 and William Brodhead, D-17, voted "nay."

BUYING A HOME Rejected, 33 for and 285 against, an amendment that sought to require person buying a home for the first time to receive special government counseling as a condition of receiving an FHA mortgage loan. Such counseling would explain the costliness of home-ownership, in hopes, its advocates said, of cutting the FHA foreclosure rate that costs the government millions annually. The amendment was proposed to HR 12433, a Department of HUD bill awaiting final passage.

Rep. Marty Russo, D-Ill., a sponsor, said: "Let us mandate pre-purchasing counseling for first-time home buyers so they know what responsibilities go along with home-ownership and are not led to believe the only cost is the monthly mortgage payment."

Rep. Thomas Ashley, D-Ohio, an opponent, said the Mortgage Bankers Association told him "this amendment...would provide major disincentives for lenders and sellers to deal with first-time homebuyers" and that the amendment "could have devastating effects on the ability of young...families to purchase a home."

Members voting "nay" opposed the amendment. Brodhead voted "yea," Bonior, Ford, Blanchard, Broomfield and Pursell voted "nay."

SENATE

NEW YORK AID Passed, 53 for and 27 against, a bill (HR 12426) providing up to $1.5 billion worth of federal loan guarantees necessary to avert New York City's bankruptcy. The bill, sent to conference with House, follows up the 1975 federal loan legislation that expired June 30, 1978.

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., a supporter, said the bill would "preserve our national city...the capital of the nation in the very real terms of economics and finance, with an enormous concentration of the business, the culture, the medicine, the education, the lines of communication and the agencies of credit which represent the strength of the U.S. to the world."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wisc., an opponent, said "it is clear to me that sufficient resources are available in New York City and New York State, from the various financial institutions and pension funds, to meet New York City's financial needs without additional assistance from the federal government. Furthermore, I have grave reservations about he precedent we are setting for other cities..."

Senators voting "yea" favored the federal assistance.

Sen. Donald Riegle, (Dem) voted "yea."

"Once the general principles are established, the applications are limitless."

Sen. Robert Griffin, (Rep) did not vote.

Electronic medical chart on way

The physician enters the hospital room, greets the patient and types a series of figures on a computer keyboard. A geometric design flashes on the attached viewing screen, indicating by its size and symmetry that the patient's condition is stable.

Gone are the charts and forms listing the patient's temperature, blood pressure, heartbeat and pulse rate. All of this information has been integrated within the figure on the screen.

"The doctor is trained to interpret its every dimension," explains University of Michigan psychologist Robert G. Pachella. "If it is out of position, it may mean a change in the heart condition. If the pattern has changed shape, it could mean an infection has set in."

"A single symptom, such as a fever or high blood pressure, may be no cause for alarm. But a combination of these—a syndrome, in medical terms—could indicate the onset of a disease or heart attack."

"The computer can correlate and display this information, thereby speeding up the physician's diagnosis and treatment."

The hospital scene is science fiction, but Pachella predicts it is within 10 years of becoming a reality. The computerized display system is already being tested at the U-M and several other institutions throughout the country.

"The mind is designed to comprehend complex patterns of information more easily than many separate components," said Pachella.

The ability to interpret large masses of information at once is quite advantageous, he adds, except in situations like the hospital setting where the data are not compiled in one place.

Many kinds of geometric designs can be used to display information—triangles, ellipses and star shapes are among those they have tested. One of the most intriguing displays is an outline of a human face. Various information can be mapped into the slant of the eyes, the size of the nose, the curvature of the mouth and other features.

"The face" offers a good illustration of one of the problems we have been working on," Pachella says. In our original example of the medical patient, suppose an increase in blood pressure is indicated by an upward slant of the eyes and a high cholesterol level produces an upward curve of the mouth.

"The combination produces a face with a happy smile, which could mask the symptoms which could predict the possibility of a fatal heart attack.

We have the technology to integrate many pieces of information into one visual display," Pachella said. "What we are most concerned with now is creating display designs that the observer can interpret instantly and accurately."

"Once the general principles are established, the applications are limitless."
