Providence league seeks new volunteer workers

Providence Hospital of Southfield has a prescription for men and women who may be suffering from the "winter blahs."

The prescription, which is sure to relieve the general letdown common after the holidays, is to become a hospital volunteer.

All that is required to fill this prescription is the willingness to help others on a regular basis. The remedy will cure the "blahs" but it should be noted that side effects include being infected with the holiday spirit of giving all year around.

"While there are no tangible rewards, volunteers gain something even more valuable," said Dorothy Wood, director of volunteer services. "They gain the deep sense of fulfillment that comes only from sharing themselves to other people."

At Providence, volunteers fill a vital role on the health care team. Their service supports and extends the work of the hospital staff and contributes greatly to the wellbeing of the patients.

The volunteer organization, Our Lady of Providence League, has a membership of 425 men and women who handle a wide range of responsibilities. As the hospital continues to grow to meet the increasing health care needs of the community, a need for additional volunteers has developed.

Current openings for volunteers exist in a variety of areas including the department's patient liaison service, delivery room, radiology, EEG-EEG and the gift shop.

The gift shop, operated by Our Lady of Providence League, is undergoing expansion that will more than double its size to better serve patients and visitors. In addition, volunteers are also being recruited for the league's gift shop, the new medical office building which is scheduled to open this spring.

The gift shop is open and weekend hours provide an excellent volunteer opportunity for working people and married couples who wish to serve as teams.

All volunteers are required to be in good health and able to commit approximately four hours a week on a regular basis. Training is given for each specific service.

For further information about the opportunities for service as a hospital volunteer, contact Mrs. Wood at 424-3300 between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays.
