

Conference to review state's land

Negotiated profit-sharing in industry will be the subject of a management conference April 14 at Wayne State University. The day-long program is entitled "Can Profit-Sharing Through Collective Bargaining Increase Profits?" It will take place in the McGregor Memorial Conference Center and is sponsored by WSU's School of Business Administration and the Management Center of the WSU Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations. About 15 million employees already participate in some 350,000 profit-sharing programs in the United States. At the Wayne State conference Bert L. Metzger, president of the Profit Sharing Research Foundation of Evanston, Ill., will review the profit-sharing experience in American industry. The conference registration fee is $75 and includes lunch. To register or to obtain more information write to Professor Edward L. Cushman, Walter P. Reuther Library of Labor and Urban Affairs, Wayne State University, Detroit 48202 or telephone him at 577-1886.

The potential for the economic development of Michigan's major natural resources will be examined during a special conference on April 15-16 at Michigan State University. Some 350 university, governmental and private-sector representatives will look at forestry, fisheries and wildlife, recreation and tourism, minerals, water and land resources. The session, sponsored by the MSU Cooperative Extension Service, will be held at the Kellogg Center for Continuing Education. Though the conference is not a mandate by Gov. Milliken — as is the state-wide agricultural conference, April 1-2 — the subsequent report will provide him with necessary economic-growth guidelines. "We will have an assessment of these major resource categories and will have identified the opportunity for economic growth in each of these areas," said Adger Carroll, assistant director for MSU Extension natural resources and public-policy programs. "Our recommendations will be the basis for planning research, educational and management programs for the natural resource areas," he said. To help develop the background material that will be discussed during the confere-ence, Carroll has formed task forces that are assessing the economic potential for each resource area. "The task forces consist of persons who are considered to be well-acquainted with each particular resource area and who will be able to chart future development and use," Carroll said. "The aim of the conference is to bring in additional people who have similar interests and who will look at what the task forces have done and make judgments about the appropriateness of the task-force recommendations."
