LITTLE FEET DESERVE ATTENTION

If parents were aware of potential foot problems in their children in early, formative years, this could greatly reduce the toll of pain, discomfort and disability afflicting 189 million Americans.

Many foot disorders have a hereditary basis, but are correctible if professional help is sought early. Bones and tissues are soft and pliable at that time. Toes, feet and legs can be reformed, allowing normal growth and function to occur.

Unfortunately, most of the 35 million visits a year to podiatrists' offices are by people in whom permanent damage has occurred. Some folks choose to treat themselves, and spend $2 billion a year on over-the-counter remedies and gadgets. This is a mistake. Self-prescribed treatment rarely corrects the cause of the disorder, which may worsen.

The foot and ankle are complex. Undue stress on a normal foot, or normal stress if your feet or toes have an abnormality, can lead to any one of 300 foot ailments. Self-treatment is usually futile; in professional hands, early consultation, diagnosis and treatment offer the best opportunity for cure or comfort.
