Ma Bell predicts deluge

Michigan residents are expected to make a record 1.75 million long distance calls this Mother's Day.

Michigan Bell is predicting that 1.15 million long distance calls will be made to places within the state and another 600,000 to points outside Michigan, according to John G. Wilson, community relations manager.

"Next to Christmas, Mother's Day is our busiest holiday. Since more people will be calling long distance this year, we suggest customers make their calls during the less busy hours to avoid delays," Wilson said.

Calls made early on Sunday morning — before 10 a.m. — or between 2 and 5 p.m. should have the best chance of going through on the first try, he explained. Or better yet, he added, some customers may want to call on Saturday.

"No matter what the hour, customers can save time and money by dialing long distance calls direct and taking advantage of our weekend discount rates," he said.

While Mother's Day is one of Michigan Bell's busiest holidays, the volume of long distance calls on a normal business day, is even greater. Telephone circuits are normally arranged to handle heavy business calling primarily between large urban areas.

Since holiday calls generally are made from homes, the Bell System rearranges nationwide telephone circuits to provide as many calling paths as possible.

For example, holiday calls to Los Angeles might be routed through Denver one minute and through Pittsburgh the next depending on available circuits. Rerouting is done automatically in a matter of microseconds.

Through the computerized Network Control Center, which serves as an automatic traffic cop for long distance calls, Michigan Bell managers can monitor potential trouble spots across the country and reroute calls as needed to minimize delays.

Nationwide, the Bell System is expecting to handle a record 40 million long distance calls this Mother's Day, including nearly 865,000 calls to foreign countries.
