House debates; Senate backs loans

Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes April 23-30.

HOUSE

Budget Rule: By a vote of 328-76, the House adopted the parliamentary rule under which it will debate and vote on the fiscal 1982 budget resolution sent to the floor by the Democratic-controlled House Budget Committee. It is a closed rule allowing only four amendments — one in support of more defense spending, two liberal plans for increased social spending, and the so-called Gramm-Latta amendment, which is essentially the Reagan administration's budget.

Most members voting "yea" supported the closed rule and wanted to get on with debate.

Most members voting "nay" were liberal or moderate Democrats who favored an open rule under which they could attack the administration budget cuts one by one.

Reps. David Bonior, D-Mount Clemens; William Brodhead, D-Detroit; James Blanchard, D-Pleasant Ridge; and William Broomfield, D-Birmingham, voted "yea."

Rep. William Ford, D-Taylor, voted "nay."
Rep. Carl Pursell, R-Plymouth, did not vote.

SENATE

Foreign Aid: The Senate passed, 58-32, and sent to the House a bill permitting the United States to contribute $3.24 billion to the International Development Association. The IDA is the window of the World Bank that makes interest-free loans to the poorest countries. Wealthier nations supply its capital, with the United States contributing 27 percent of the loan money. The $3.24 billion is for fiscal years 1981-83.

Supporter Charles Percy, R-Ill., said: "The Russians would love to see us abandon our commitments to the multilateral development banks. Terrorism and Communism thrive on poverty, the very conditions that the IDA attacks."

Opponent Steven Symms, R-Idaho, said World Bank officials are "still from the school of economics that put this country into such an economic mess . . . They believe in redistribution of the wealth schemes which have hurt growth, hindered investment . . ."

Senators voting "yes" favored U.S. support of World Bank loans to poor countries.

Democratic Sens. Carl Levin and Donald Riegle voted "yea."

World Bank: By a vote of 30-61, the Senate refused to table an amendment delaying until fiscal 1983 the majority of the three-year $3.24 billion U.S. contribution to the World Bank's International Development Association. Left intact by the vote was a plan to soften current federal spending by breaking the contribution into uneven annual payments — $540 million for fiscal 1981, $550 million for 1982 and $1.85 billion for 1983.

Most senators voting to table favored an alternative amendment reducing U.S. support of World Bank loans to poor countries. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., asked: "Why spend deficit dollars when we have an opportunity to tell our allies . . . that we cannot afford it?"

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., an opponent of tabling, said senators "know how easy it is to take a shot at foreign assistance, foreign aid, and contributions to multilateral development banks. That is the easiest target in town politically."

Senators voting "yea" wanted U.S. funding of loans to poor countries to be eliminated or drastically cut.

Riegle votes "yea."
Levin voted "nay."
