Conversation Starters

A live tree from which water has been spouting for more than two generations stands in the village of Gunten on Lake Thuz, Switzerland. The villagers have watered their cattle in the trough fed by the flowing tree for so long that they have forgotten where the water comes from. Sixty years ago a pipeline was brought in and the pipe was fastened to a green wooden post. The post threw out roots and grew into a tree. In the process of growing, the pipe became completely embedded in the trunk and now continues to flow as if the tree contained an inexhaustible reservoir of water.
