

Cimarron by Cadillac

Cadillac has changed its image as a producer of very large cars with the addition of the Cimarron. The Cimarron is a four-door, front-wheel-drive car with an overall length of 173 inches and a wheelbase of 101 inches. The 2,600-pound car has black-walled radial tires as standard. It is powered by a 1.8-liter, transverse mounted L-4 engine that delivers 85 horsepower.

'Modified' engine won't improve mpg

All of us are looking for ways to squeeze more miles out of a gallon of gasoline, and there are lots of ways to do it.

You can improve your driving habits.

You can make sure your engine is running at peak efficiency.

You can check tire inflation and wheel alignment.

You can use your air conditioner less frequently.

There are some things you can do to get better fuel economy. There are many things that you should not do.

Don't tamper. Engines in today's cars provide motorists with a good combination of performance, economy and low emissions.

If you attempt to change any of these three areas it will be done at the detriment of at least one and possibly both of the other two.

There really is no need to tamper with anti-polluttion equipment because it doesn't hurt fuel economy. Latest emission control equipment has enabled automotive engineers to improve fuel economy.

Drivers of late-model cars could not be more wrong if they think that a few small adjustments to today's emission control equipment can increase car performance and fuel economy.

The best advice is to follow the service manual that comes with all new cars. It can save motorists money and only a few maintenance costs but less fuel consumption.

Another form of tampering with engine controls on the car is to force feed regular leaded gasoline into cars that call for unleaded gas. Contrary to some opinions, regular gas does not have any noticeable advantage over unleaded fuel in economy.

Using leaded fuel on catalytic converter-equipped cars only destroys the converter and pollutes the air.

Mall will show old, new Fords

A collection of the new 1981 Ford cars will be displayed with earlier model Fords at Oakland Mall Thursday-Sunday.

Oakland Mall is on 14 Mile east of John R in Troy.

Featured at the show will be a cut-away version of the 1981 Ford Escort. A narrator will be at the mall to discuss the exhibit.
