abolishment and printer of Sandwich, Canada, they formed a land holding company. Destitute black families were allotted 25-acre homesteads on easy financial terms. The society purchased a large tract of land south of Windsor, which was subdivided.

Laura Haviland started a school in the settlement in 1852. A.L. Power of Farmington, Harvard Hallock and Nathan Stone were members of the board of overseers of the Refugee Bible Society.

THE LIVONIA meeting was less stable than the Farmington meeting.

In 1843, members joined with New York Quakers, such as Susan B. Anthony, Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in challenging provisions of the Book of Discipline, which outlined the role of ministers and elders.

The Genesee yearly meeting disowned or dropped from membership those Friends who would not abide by the Discipline. In 1848, dissident Quakers in Adrian, Livonia, Battle Creek
