marathon, and I entered.
"The week before, I went out for a training run and tried going is miles.
"I ran out of steam after 12 miles,
and hitch-liked home," said the slightly-greying Gelfond.
"The guy who picked me up happened to be the director of the run. He talked me into entering, and I finished in three hours and 45 misutes. I felt like (I was) dragging load."

The Wayse State University graduate was so certaint be feelded to run at

"I wasn't conditioned to taking water, and after 21 miles I blacked out," he said. "My wife Harriet wasn't too happy to hear I ended up in a hospital with a 108-degree temperature." Gelfond's lesson-learned-the-hard-way paid off. The father of three returned the following year and licked the Boston course in 3:07.

HAVING LICKED the marathon, Gelfond sought a new challenge. He discovered the annual 50-mile ultra-marathons in Lake Waramang, Conn., and Chicago, and decided to enter.

In the end, the challenge was irresistible. Gelfond found himself in Colorado at a high-altitude-training semi-nar the evening before the gut-wrenching marathon.

"I GOT VERY queasy hearing peo-ples' battle tales," he said. "They talked about evacuating collapsed runners, loose 'B's, altitude sickness and oxygen debt.

When I hit the finish line I was ready to burst into tears of joy."
