Westland Goes Parisian

By MARGARET MILLER Women's Editor The four beautiful models had the long, lean look, the chic that could come only from Paris. The styles were high fashion—many daring and most completely wearable on the American scene. The fabrics were distinctive—with both subtle and vibrant tones represented. And the show viewed by several hundred women Saturday at the Westland Shopping Center was designed for the home sewer.

top couturier houses in Paris, arrived here from Seattle and were going on to Minneapolis after the showings here. They travel with an interpreter because they speak limited English. ALL GARMENTS, ranging from not-so-sporty jumpsuits and lounge wear to a glamorous Givenchy flowing wrap-over a slim pantsuit, were made from Vogue patterns. But not by home sewers. Expert seamstresses employed by Vogue in New York did the construction. However, many of the patterns were easy-to-make types, and Miss Ketehtut said Hudson's can give names of dressmakers in this area to women who do not trust their own ability with a sewing machine.

Most of the skirt lengths (as worn by the Parisians) were shorter than shown in the fashion sketches, indicating no overwhelming trend in Paris to lower the hemline. A few mid-length skirts spiced the collection. Miss Ketehtut explained: "Our models feel, and we feel at Hudson's, that there's a skirt length suited to everyone, and it is dictated only by body proportions and the date on the birth certificate."

Since the normal juvenile foot is constantly growing it is important that the last be changed often enough in its contour to allow for this growth. Pro-tek-tiv lasts are changed twice in every size range—other children's shoes are made over lasts which change only once in each size range.
