

wers and on which kind of growth its flowers shoots — from the current season, wood from the previous year, or wood two or more years old.

You should prune plants that bloom on new shoots before the plant blooms. Plants that bloom on year-old wood should be pruned after flowering. With plants blooming on wood two or more years old, you need not be as selective. Just cut to shorten and thus strengthen the branches.

Other pruning guidelines to keep in mind are that pruning can either dwarf a plant or make it grow taller. Reducing a plant's height makes it denser and sturdier; thinning it produces a taller more open plant.

Strong light produces a thick growth of leaves and limbs. Two branches growing close together are in competition. If you shorten one, its longer neighbor will mature more readily.
