Don't be timid: Start pruning and don't stop

Gardeners need a strong hand in training young hedges and must prune the "baby" plants back at least three or four times a year to create a luxurious, mature wall of green.

If the new hedge is left unpruned, it will have a loose, uneven texture with scanty leaves at the bottom.

To start a new hedge, buy plants which are bare root or in gallon size cans. Space plants 24 to 30 inches apart and, when they are safely rooted, start your pruning.

First thing you do is shear off about one-third at the top and on all sides, this technique will force thicker growth right down of the ground and allow the sun to
