Cable ordinances scrutinized at tonight's council meetings

The year 1997 is a long way off and might be uncertain when one is speaking of cable television. But tonight City Council members in Farmington and Farmington Hills will be reviewing an ordinance governing cable television in those two cities and neighboring Novi for the next 15 years. In the wake of recent federal court rulings that have rocked the cable field, such as the decision that cities cannot grant cable companies an exclusive contract, the tri-city committee has recommended that a contractual agreement accompany the ordinance. That way, said Farmington City Manager Robert Deadman, if a judge rules cities can't regulate cable companies through a city ordinance the three communities still have an agreement which mirrors the language of the ordinance. The ordinance guarantees a rate freeze for the first three years of the franchise. Rates start at $2.45 per month plus an initial $9.95 installation fee for 22 channels including all local channels and the public access cable channels. The rates go up to a fee of $7.25 for a full range of local and satellite programs excluding pay-TV offerings such as Home Box Office. Pay-TV rates cannot, by law, be regulated by city ordinance, but MetroVision Cable Television proposes an initial extra charge of $7.50 for the Home Box Office option, $7.50 for The Movie Channel and $4.50 for the family-oriented Home Theater Network offerings. THE ORDINANCE is 48 pages long and covers such things as potential purchase of the cable system from MetroVision. Penalties for failing to meet the construction schedule or bad service are spelled out in the ordinance. Under terms of the agreement the tri-city cable authority receives $150,000 plus thousands of dollars worth of equipment to broadcast programs of community concerns. Further, 2 percent of the company's gross revenues will be given to the three cities on a proportion-per-subscriber basis, and 3 percent of any advertising revenues will be turned over to the municipalities.
