Vocational center scores zero failure rate

Southwest Oakland Vocational Education Center's (SOVEC) summer school program closes shop this month "with a failure rate of zero," said Richard Briggs.

The counselor and consultant for the center in Wilson added, "The majority of students received grades in the A and B range. This has been one of our most successful summer schools."

SOVEC's summer school is in its 10th year. It is the combined effort of the Southwest Oakland quadrant representing seven school districts and 12 high schools. Farmington, North Farmington and Harrison High Schools are among the participants.

Students are bussed to and from their feeder schools to the center, where they spend five hours a day, four days a week. One school credit is granted for the six-week period of training.

"The majority of the students are here to explore possible career choices for the coming school year," Briggs said. "Many broaden their experiences. Limited numbers are here to obtain necessary credit."

The school offered classes in auto mechanics, data processing, food service, machine trades, retailing, office procedures and welding.

Some of the students were involved in the cosmetology course, which is a year-round program.

"It is the hope of the vocational center not only to continue the summer school program, but to expand it and see it run for many years to come," Briggs said.
