Providence will provide speakers

Providence Hospital's Speakers Bureau offers a wide variety of health and wellness topics to community groups and organizations.

The program, coordinated by the community health education department, will provide a program speaker free of charge upon request.

"People today are more interested than ever before in adopting lifestyles which enhance their health and well-being," said Pam Ashworth, coordinator of community health education. Topics available include: weight control, nutrition, parenting, child and adolescent development, aging and the proper use of medications.

"We will also be happy to locate speakers for topics by special request," she said.

"Providence has always responded to requests from the community for speakers," said Judy Mecum, assistant director of community relations. Mecum is helping to coordinate the program. "Health care professionals have valuable information to share with individuals concerned about their health and well-being. And, this program is just one more way Providence reaches out to serve the community," she said.

Persons interested in getting a speaker for their group or organization, should call the community health education office at 552-9041 for details. There is no charge for this service.

What's so great about our paper clips?

1. They make unique, but inexpensive tie clips for the cost conscious executive.
2. Where else can you buy 50 pairs of high fashioned pierced earrings for under 60 cents?
3. One customer uses our paper clips for fishing hooks (so far he still ends up at Arthur Treacher's).
4. Oh yes, they're also great for holding paper!
