

JEWELRY BOXES sold well, and it was partly because of the bright smile of Cindy Harris, president of Zee-Tab. Miss Harris lives in Livonia and meets with Junior Achievement in Plymouth.

How Youth Gets Into Business

Merchants at Livonia Mall got some "youth power" competition last weekend.

Teenager manufacturers from 77 Junior Achievement companies put on a display of their products for two days in an atmosphere of a medieval bazaar.

Their products included first aid kits, wastebaskets, hot plates, "peace" flowers - a wide range of small manufactured items, ranging from the practical to the exotic.

The youngsters are organized in companies with names like "Cadco," "Plyco" and "Izzit." Each company has corporate officers.

They go through the life of a business from beginning to end - from the sale of stock and election of officers, to manufacture and sale of the products, and finally to the paying of something resembling corporate income taxes.

The exhibit was photographed by Craig Gaffield of the Observer Newspapers staff.

YOUR OWN NAMEPLATE could be obtained from Plyco Co. of Plymouth. Bob Pence and Pam Hasley made them on order for customers at the mall.

AUTO SAFETY FLARE-PACS appealed to the practical and safety-conscious. Plymouth JA teens (from left) Carl Neuman, Debbie Russell and Jan Palmer sold them for $1 to mall customers.

IZZIT CO.'s pretty Terry Streicker offered plastic flowers made by the Redford Junior Achievement group. The cold weather and late arrival of spring that week made the flowers all the more attractive.

PEACE FLOWERS, made of plastic, were offered by Redford Junior Achievers Peggy Mangold and Tom Fraser. The company is called Peace-Makers, reflecting the youngsters' socio-political view of business.

MOSAIC HOTPLATES were offered by Macanika Co. of Plymouth. Frank Hicks and Dennis Hasley sold the bright-colored tile plates.
