WINE NOT?
By Armando Decapito

What wine goes with what? The rules aren't rigid; they are based on logic. Generally, red wines with red meat, white with white. Rose can be drunk with many light foods, especially for luncheon or a picnic. And champagne—ah, champagne goes with everything!

Richer, stronger wines are best with foods of richer taste. Red, burgundy-type wines can hold their own with beef roasts or turkey. A lighter red, Bordeaux-type, will complement roast chicken or even finger-held Southern-fried. Wine belongs even at a barbecue.

Most fish dishes call for white wine or rose; but a light red might taste better with stronger flavors like shrimp creole, snails or lobster à la diable.

Most people like dry wine with dinner. Why? Because most foods taste better with it. Sweet wine can make food taste sour or acidic.

There are sweet wines, even a sweeter champagne, that are for desserts, especially simple ones like custards, poached fruit or plain cake.

If you're in a restaurant, and want to order wine, select it as soon as you can. Red wines need to be opened to "breathe" before they're served; white ones need time to chill. Let us help you with your wine selections. You'll find excellent values at BOTTLE & BASKET WINE SHOPPES
