Levin says Reagan's nuke policy is unreal

U.S. Sen. Carl Levin accused the administration today of Ignoring reality, and jeopardizing world stability when it argues that the United States is infectior to the Soviet Union in nuclear capability and seeks to build the MX missile.

Levin, in a speech prepared for a University of Michigan convocation on Solutions to the Nuclear Arms Race, said, "The infectiority argument is a red herring . . . The real issue is whether we have sufficient capability to deter and respond, adequately" to a nuclear attack.

the ability to respond effectively to a Soviet attack," Levin said, "We are not restricted to launching an attack against their cities or surrendering. We have the ability to hit a broad range of targets even after a first strike hits us."

Levin, a member of the Senated Levin, a member of the Senated Armed Services Committee, said he had visited Strategic Air Command-headquarters in Omnha and "Satisfied myself that we can hit a broad range of military and industrial targets and are not limited to a strike directly against rogulation center. population center.
"If the Soviets were successful in launching a perfectly coordinated attack on our land-based missiles, it has been estimated that some 19 million Americans would be killed and some 14-20 percent of our industrial capacity would be destroyed.

"We could respond in kind, killing approximately the same number of Soviet cilleras and destroying about the same amount of industrial capacity, and still have an adequate number of warheads left with which to deter or respond to any Soviet attike or attempt at nuclear coercion."

Lovin said the new MX missile "is a weapon which serves no legitlmate purpose and threatens the very real though very small gains we have made in our efforts to bring some stability to the world."

Levin said if the reason for the MX is Levin said if the reason for the MX is to let other nations perceive that the U.S. is strong, "perhaps a portion of the defense budget ought to be spent on hiring a good public relations firm to convince the world we are strong enough. We could even save that money if we simply told our national leaders to stop running around the country saying how weak we are in order to gain some political support for their budget request.
