

Oakway announces prize winners

Oakway Symphony has announced the winners of its recent Young Artist Competition. Winners will perform with the orchestra at an "Artists of Tomorrow" concert Feb. 20 at Harrison High School in Farmington Hills.

Mark Agabian of Livonia, pianist, received first prize of $1,000. He is a University of Michigan student. For the competition, he played the Kharachurian Piano Concerto, Third Movement.

Carol Sahokian of Birmingham, who competed in voice, was awarded $750. She attends the University of Michigan. She sang arias by Puccini and Gounod.

Maria Fattore of Pleasant Ridge and Jeffrey Zook of Ann Arbor tied for third place and each received $450. Fattore, in the voice division, sang arias of Verdi, Mozart and Strauss. She is a student at Eastern Michigan University. Zook, who plays flute, performed the Mozart Flute Concerto, Second and Third Movements. He attends the University of Michigan.

Tracy Cross of Gross Pointe, violinist, received $350 for fourth prize. He is a student at the Gross Pointe Academy. His musical selection was the Bruch Violin Concerto, Third Movement.

HONORABLE MENTION went to the following young artists:

First, Catherine Bennett of Farmington, voice, University of Akron.

Second, Clartha Buggs of Ann Arbor, voice, University of Michigan.

Third, Curt Christensen of Mt. Clemens, trumpet, New York School of Music.

Fourth, Eric Edmunds of Ann Arbor, piano, University of Michigan.

Sixteen out of the 42 contestants were students from the U-M. Judges were Kenneth Jean, resident conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra; Douglas Morrison, conductor of the Scandinavian Symphony Orchestra; and Francesco Di Biasi, conductor of the Oakway Symphony Orchestra.

"The talent is right up there again," Di Biasi said. "For some reason, there were more voice contestants than in past years — a much higher standard. The whole standard was high again but particularly in voice."

"Fourteen were really in the running for the prizes and the honorable mention."

Second runs Tom Panzenhagen

"The Naked Runner" (1967), 4 p.m. Sunday on Ch. 50. Originally 104 minutes.

You can count Frank Sinatra's good films on one hand, while it takes several appendages to number his more forgettable efforts. "The Naked Runner" falls into the former category. The spy thriller finds blue eyes forced into a despicable undercover assignment while his son is held hostage until the dirty work is done. Plausible script, fine acting and plot twists make this a first-rate film.

Rating: $2.95.

"Gambit" (1968), 1 p.m. Monday on Ch. 50. Originally 109 minutes.

Director Ronald Neame's "Gambit" is an amusing film because it pokes fun at portions of such far-fetched pictures as "To Catch a Thief" or "Topkapl," "big-belt" pictures that assign almost-superhuman qualities to their cat-burglar protagonists. Michael Caine and Shirley MacLaine star as would-be thieves/human flies; first we see their scheme as it was meant to be hatched (a la "Topkapl") and then the same plan as it ultimately unfolds. Herbert Ross and Roger C. Carmel also star.

Rating: $2.85.

"Captain Blood" (1935), 1 Monday night on Ch. 50. Originally 99 minutes.

The acting is atrocious, the script is awful and the scenery stinks, but "Captain Blood" endures. It's Errol Flynn's first major movie, and that's what counts. An improbable scene early on, Errol recites his life story to a maid who simply asks how late he'll be out. That's what they call character development. Later, landscapes are made of cardboard, and the dashing Flynn's portrayal of an Irish rogue is equally as transparent. (If only they had cast him as an Australian rogue.) Yet "Captain Blood" really is a film worth seeing. Basil Rathbone, Olivia de Havilland, Guy Kibbee and Lionel Atwill enhance the festivities. Michael Curtiz directs and refines a skill for adventure films that later would exhibit itself in another, far better Flynn swashbuckler, "The Adventures of Robin Hood" (1938). Be sure to note Flynn's naturally crooked smile — a "flaw" later corrected by Hollywood's image makers.

Rating: $2.95.
