Living with death is dinner topic

The Career Women lecture series of the Jewish Welfare Federation Women's Division will present author Harriet Schiff and Hospice director of volunteers Hazel Maxwell March 7 at United Hebrew Schools, 21550 W. 12 Mile, Southfield.

Reservations are required for the 6 p.m. dinner, which will be followed by the 7 p.m. meeting. There is a charge.

The program will focus on dealing with death and bereavement as part of the normal life cycle. Schiff, who wrote "The Bereaved Parent" and has appeared on numerous television programs, will discuss widowhood, sibling attitudes toward death and how Jewish parents teach their children about it. Maxwell, who has been with the Hospice of Southeastern Michigan for the past five years, will discuss how the terminally ill and their families can make choices without guilt.

The Career Women series presents timely topics of general and Jewish interest to those working women who wish to play an active role in communal life. It is one of many activities of Federation's Women's Division, whose year-round focus is education, fund raising and service. Jane Sherman of Birmingham is division president. Career Women chairman is Malka Gordon of Oak Park, and Cecile Ratcliff of West Bloomfield is associate chairman. Jeannette Tilchin of Huntington Woods is advisor.
