IF THE WOOD surface to be painted as mildewed, it should be washed and sterritzed with a solution of two caps of house-hold bleach and one cup of tri-sodium phosphate per gallon before painting. The dry surface should be painted as soon as possible after washing to prevent new mildew spores from incubating.

Oil-base house paint is not recommended for masonry walls as it does not stand up well on this material and has a glossy finish. (A dull finish is desirable on brick or stucco). Latex house paints on the other hand, dry dull, resist, alkali, and let trapped moisture vapor excape without causing blettering anthere well control of the contro

TRIM PAINTS are available in both oil-base and latex types, and are harder-drying and glossier than house paints. If regular house paints are used on trun, the color is apt to fade quickly, and surfaces that get hard wear, such as doors, will be harder to keep clean.

that get hard wear, such as doors, will be harder to keep clean.

Oil-base trirm paints thin with turpentine and usually have an alkyd base Their hard finish makes them suitable for use on toys, outdoor furniture, and play equipment, as well as on house trim.

Latex trim paint is comparatively new, This has a semigloss finish, and is generally not quite as hard-drying as the turpentine-thinned trim points.

This may make it, however, more resistant to cracking on surfaces where frequent flexing or expansion could cause the harder-drying oil-base paint to crack.
