Committees

EDITOR:
While I was generally pleased with your article of April 22 discussing the non-economic nature of the School-craft College faculty-administration relationships, certain statements attributed to me should, for accuracy's sake, be farther than the statement attributed to me should, for accuracy's sake, be farther than the same resident with your reporter. I certainly did not mean to conver the impression that the college's cultural affairs committee was 'the only well-regarded panel,' that the other college committiees did hittle or nobling. Rather, in discussing the nature of the schools' committees. I noted that those groups dealing with essentially mundame operations threatening no one's authority or challenging no major policy worked rather.

Since I, as the cultural affairs chalirman, was most fairs chalirman, was most fairs.

major policy worked rather well.

Slove I, as the cultural affairs chairman, was most familiar with that committee. I mentioned it as the best example I could think of relating to that type of committees. On the other hand, those-committees that have raised such challenges to authority or policy have frequently been ignored or disbanded. Hence, the feeling on the part of many faculty members that these committees have been and are primarily "busy-work.

Finally, site of the committees are port directly to the president, it is obvlous where the final decision-making power lies. Such procedures do not constitute "meaningful" involvement.

If any further evidence for the validity of our position was needed, it was supplied at a recent board of trustees meeting where administrative spokesmen emphasized their need for greater "control" over the faculty. How unfortunate indeed that they chose not to offer leader-ship, innovation, cooperation or trust in so causually turning aside our efforts to meaning-fully participate in the opera-tion of the college.
