

Blair Reed mounts his works in polished wood. Many are electrified. He works in a variety of sizes and shapes as well as designs and each is totally original.

Self-taught glass artist learned from the ancients

Strictly on his own, glass artist Blair Reed of Royal Oak has carried the art of intaglio in glass to a high level.

An exhibit of his large works is on display at Jacobsons Store for the Home, Birmingham, through this week and selected pieces will continue to be available there indefinitely.

Reed who said "there's really nobody teaching this" explained that his greatest help came from his independent study of Egyptian, Greek and Roman bas relief and Chinese jades.

He works on 1/4- to 3/4-inch-thick glass, using masking tape to delineate his cutting areas and completing his work with a sand blasting technique.

REED WHO works extensively by commission has done architectural detailing, door walls and windows in addition to the firescreens and sculptural pieces in the present exhibit.

He recently completed a piece for presentation to officials in China to commemorate the signing of a contract between China and American Motors Corp.

While all of his designs are aesthetically pleasing, one in particular, which pleases him, is Egyptian in feeling with hieroglyphic symbols for integrity, goodness, soul, birth, heart and many others which embody the Egyptian belief in life and the hereafter.

Reed said the fireplace screens with hinged side panels are especially beautiful, for when they are in front of a fire, they glow a rich amber.

"All the details pop out," said Reed. Jacobson's Store for the Home is at 325 N. Woodward, Birmingham.

Fireplace screen is a decorative work of art which also is functional. Blair Reed does these in many different designs.
