

Adopting classics for now lifestyle

AUTUMN '83 is more dressed up, sophisticated and civilized. Refinement is the word!

A key ingredient is sophisticated sportswear that combines easy wearability with a new polish. The clothes look new, and you feel more dressed up.

The social and fashion pendulum is swinging back from the sometimes relaxed haphazard dressing of recent years to pieces that match and look like it. Even separates, those individual pieces we love to live in, have become "matched multiples."

There are some really hot items this season, which you'll want to investigate.

The coat dress, the pin-stripe suit, lots of pieces in knits from jackets to trousers, glitz-glamour and shine for evening, black, and outdoors clothes.

You're going to have a great time discovering the wearability of clothes for fall '83. The looks are comfortable, professional and glamorous.

Color plays a big part in what's happening, too. In fact, traditional items such as the jacket will look new when they're colored in jewel bright colors. Color choices from jewel tones to grays will require you to make choices. However, black still reigns for evening.

Sharon Schaffer discovered the ideal alternative to the suit when she found David Hayes's red coat dress, $355, at Bonwit Teller. She borrowed her fedora from the boys and a smashing black umbrella fitted with carved wooden duck from the men's department. The look, Schaffer said, is ideal for luncheon at Jacques restaurant, where she was photographed.

Colleen Zeigler's lifestyle as an aerobics instructor depends on "spare parts dressing," which calls for relaxed pieces in important colors. Her big shirt tunic, $130, pants, $65, and long sleeve T-shirt, $50, are all by Betty Appel.

Not all man tailoring needs to be devoted to the suit. Barbara Erb's English plaid dress with a hacking panel back brings the country look to the city. Adele Simpson, $385. Bonwit Teller.

Rosanne Schlüssel mixes color and pattern with the French schoolgirl dress, which is prim and chic in gray and burgundy plaid. Velvet collar and belt, plus matching accessories complete the look of her town-and-country appearance. Hattie, Inc.

Betty Appel proved that her designs are go-anywhere perfect during a trip to the Flight Guard Armory. A favorite is the "Grandpa coat," more than $200, which is paired with trousers, $110.
