

Style suggests a dynamic personality

Dear Mrs. Green:
I have been interested in your column since I moved to this area. People tell me I have distinctive handwriting, and I would be happy to have your critique of it. I am a woman, age 53 and write with my right hand.

V.U. Farmington

Dear V.U.:
Your distinctive handwriting style tells me that you were probably a feminist long before it was the popular thing to be. I think this dates back to a time when it took courage and confidence to be one.
Your total departure from copybook writing style with its many original forms is replete with superlatives.
A dynamic personality with enthusiasm and vigor is suggested by the firm pressure and elongated 't' bars.

Most lead-in strokes have been omitted. This is done by people who can step away from conventional thinking and deal with new concepts. In combination with the simplified strokes, it further points up your efficiency and time awareness.

You are blessed with a fine intellect. You are an observant person and aware of all aspects of your daily routine. But you do not allow yourself to become bogged down by them. You handle these demands and then expeditiously move one to the bigger challenges.

You are not a stranger to the finer things of life. Cultural strokes abound in this handwriting. (Small 'g's that resemble figure 8's, 'e's that look like backward 3's and your stick 't's.)
An innate sense of beauty is suggested by your marginal spacing and printed capital letters.
You are objective, and decisions are predicated on reason, not emotion. In interpersonal relationships you do not often allow yourself to become emotionally involved with others. And in each busy day you seem to seek out some time for yourself.

If you have a question about your handwriting, write to Lorene C. Green, a certificated graphologist, in care of this newspaper. Please use a full sheet of white, unlined paper writing in the first person singular. Age and handedness are also helpful. And feedback is always welcome.

I have been interested in your column ever since.
