This salad makes a meal

What is made in one dish, contains meat, vegetables and dairy products and doesn't have to be cooked? The answer is a main-dish "stratified" salad.

The Chef's Strata Salad or layered salad was created as a no-cook alternative to the all-American casserole. The salad is composed in steps beginning with a bed of mixed greens, followed by layers of fresh vegetables, cold meat and cheese, and crowned with plenty of thick dressing.

When it comes to nutrition and flavor, a stratified salad really stacks up against a casserole, and takes much less time and energy. A meal composed of a main-dish stratified salad and fresh bread sticks or crackers can include representatives from all the basic food groups in a way that is new, exciting and easy to prepare. The salad may be made up to eight hours in advance when covered well with plastic wrap and refrigerated until serving time.

To make a main-dish Chef's Strata Salad, line a shallow tray or platter with your favorite lettuce variety, then arrange a layer of fresh mushroom slices and red onion rings. Top them with a circle of rolled ham slices and tomato wedges, and pour a liberal amount of dressing in the center. Sprinkle shredded cheddar cheese over the entire salad.

You can combine your own favorite ingredients to build a variety of salads: start with a bed of your favorite mixed greens, then be creative and generous with the fixings. You can try cold, cooked, chopped chicken; avocado wedges; Swiss cheese slices and alfalfa sprouts with cucumber dressing for a garden-fresh California strata salad. Or go south-of-the-border with taco meat, cheddar cheese and hot peppers served with toasted onion dressing and tortilla chips. Make a hero strata salad with pepperoni, salami, and provolone or mozzarella cheese slices, onion rings and a topping of Italian herb dressing.
