Kroger Updates Nutritional Level In Baked Goods

The Kroger Co. has announced a major program designed to help fight malnutrition and provide more nutritious products for the consumer's food dollar.

The program will be in four phases.

All white flour used in Kroger's ten regional bakeries serving 1500 supermarkets will be enriched with riboflavin (Vitamin B-2), thiamin (Vitamin B-1), niacin and iron in accordance with the standards of identity established by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Kroger, which produces in excess of 300,000,000 pounds of baked goods a year, is the 10th largest baker in the United States. The new program means that the company's enrichment program will be broadened to include some 230 additional food items baked by Kroger which were not previously enriched.

Kroger is the first food retailer and baker in the United States to take this step, which was recommended by several panels of the White House Council on Food, Nutrition and Health.

In addition, outside food manufacturers who pack Kroger private brand products are being contacted regarding the use of enriched flour in Kroger products. This group includes such items as cake mixes and refrigerated biscuits, which are among several dozen products using

Delta Zetas Will Install

The evening will begin with cocktails at 6:30 p.m.

Other officers to be installed are Mary Lynn Baker, vice chairman; Mary Jo Workman, secretary; and Marlene Berry, treasurer. All are from Livonia.

All Delta Zeta members in the metropolitan area are invited to attend and may make reservations by calling Mrs. Douglas Myers, 721-4562.

white flour which are packed for Kroger by other food manufacturers.

Low-cost, nutritionally-balanced recipes and menus will be featured in newspaper food advertising to help educate consumers concerning better diets for their families.

Research into the development of entirely new food products which are high in nutrition has been instituted.

KROGER'S BROADENED enrichment program will now include such items as snack crackers, sweet rolls, cakes, doughnuts and even ice cream cones. The move recognizes the changing eating patterns of the 1970's and brings the benefits of enrichment to the broadest possible group of consumers. Previously, only white bread and roll items had additional food items baked by Kroger which were not previously enriched.

In making the announcement, B. D. Reasser, vice-president of the company's baked goods division, said: "This major step to improve the nutritional intake of all consumers has been under consideration for some time. The final decision came after evaluation of mounting evidence of persistent malnutrition in the United States at every economic level."

THE FOOD and nutrition experts from throughout the country who gathered for the conference reported that: "Malnutrition in the U.S. is not confined to low-income groups, but extends to the affluent as well."

Private industry should take immediate steps to provide foods with a higher nutritional content for consumers.

Food companies should begin by improving the nutritional qualities of those foods which people enjoy and are accustomed to eating.
