Queer Clock in Cathedral.

A gallery below the dial across which heathen deities drive in chariots is but one of the remarkable features of the clock constructed in 1842 for the Strasbourg cathedral. Diana drove on Monday, Mars on Tuesday, and so on.

Higher up was a second gallery, with a figure holding two bells. At each quarter hour a second figure appeared and struck one of the bells. At the hour an old man walked across, striking the four quarters, and after him came the figure of Death, which struck the hour with a bone.

At noon in the top gallery the Twelve Apostles walked in procession around Our Lord, who at the close made the sign of the cross. While this went on a clock on a pinnacle on the left of the figures flapped his wings and crowed three times.

A famous clock possessed by one of the emperors of China boasted a fully-equipped automatic orchestra playing 40 foreign and 20 Chinese musical selections. A similar piece of ingenuity is owned by a man in England. His clock's "orchestra" consisting of a flute, a cello, two violins, two dancers, and three singers.

Muzzled.
For nearly an hour the talkative idiot had bored his fellow passengers in the railway carriage with accounts of his dog, Caesar. Caesar could stand upon his hind legs—you should just see him; Caesar ate hot chestnuts—not chestnuts, just think of it! Caesar was a champion ratter, too.

And, oh, Caesar was fond of cats.

"Sir," said an old gentleman in the corner, who had been vainly trying to smother forty winks, "suppose you took Caesar into a shop and bought him a muzzle and then asked the assistant to put it on for you and he refused to do so, what would you do?"

"Well," said the talkative idiot, "I'd put it on myself."

"Quite so," said the old gent, "and I think all here will agree with me that you would look jolly with it on, too."

Work Where You Are

If you intend to go to work, there is no better place than right where you are; if you do not intend to go to work, you cannot get along anywhere. Squirming and crawling about from place to place can do no good—Abraham Lincoln.

Tribes in "Six Nations"

The following tribes were originally called the "Five Nations": Cayuga, Mohawk, Oneida, Onondaga, Seneca. Later the Tuscarora tribe was added making the "Six Nations." These tribes are located in New York and Canada, and some in Oklahoma.
