TO PROTECT INVESTORS

Legislation which will protect the small investor and the home owner from promoters doing business under the guise of building and loan associations, and who are alleged to work a hardship on the investor with the "membership fee scheme," was discussed at a recent joint conference of the executive committee of the Michigan League of Building and Loan Association, held at Lansing, says Michigan Investor.

Every association in this league is under state supervision with regular examinations by the secretary of state's department.

The league does a strictly building and loan business, it is claimed, and has no promotion schemes whatsoever.

It is planned by the league to compel promoters of other concerns to comply with the same requirements to eliminate membership fee promotions and to assure the investor at least a return of as much as he invests.

Such legislation will be drafted with the help of state officials, it is said.
