

She had idea that took off

JUDY MACEY brainstormed an idea in 1979 that has given winter in Birmingham a new meaning ever since.

She wanted to start something that would promote the Birmingham Schools Community Education program, help agencies work cooperatively for the good of the community and bring residents out and together to enjoy the many benefits of the season.

WINTER CARNIVAL fit the bill.

"Thinking of the ideas is easy, but they aren't always as easy to implement," said Macey, who was at the time vice-chairman of the Community Education Central Advisory Council.

"I never anticipated the problems that might evolve," she said.

"When you begin something like that you don't understand what problems could happen."

Continuing to capitalize on her ideas, Macey puts them to good use at her job at Seaholm High School where she works involving students in activities.

Macey said she's pleased to see the Winter Carnival concept snowball into a beneficial activity for many groups and organizations in the city.

"I think it's grown very nicely, and I like the idea that it's evolved without one central organization deciding everything, and with each group taking care of their own event," she said.

MAKING THE Winter Carnival a "unique event is important," and the type of activity it represents makes Birmingham a special kind of community, she said.

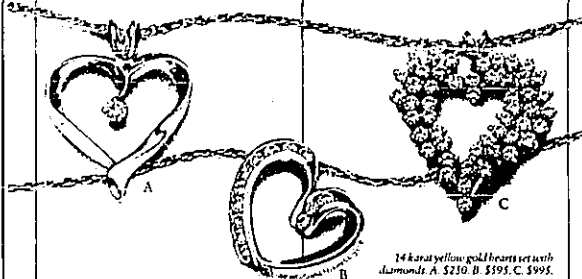

"There are a lot of people in the Birmingham who are determined to do that," she said.

Macey would like to see more ice sculptures decorating spots around town as well as more "in-town involvement to draw more people to the heart of the city."

"There are many ways to give her my heart. And I found them all at Wright Kay."

A gift of a shimmering gold heart says more than you could ever say with words alone. Cover that heart with diamonds, and you can be sure your message will sparkle forever.

Best of all, no matter which style you choose for her, you can give her your heart with confidence. Because we guarantee your satisfaction. Just as we have for generations.
