

U-M Dearborn's Expansion Okd

DEARBORN
Expansion of the Dearborn campus to a full four-year operation with a continued link to the University of Michigan was assured with the State Legislature's passage of a $2,310,250 appropriation bill for UM-D's 1970-71 operation. The appropriation includes a $225,000 authorization for the development of a lower division program (freshmen and sophomore course offerings). During its 11-year history, the Dearborn campus has operated solely as a junior-senior and graduate level institution.

"This represents a significant step forward in the university's plans for vigorous development and expansion of the Dearborn campus," said UM-D Dean Norman R. Scott.

"We are extremely pleased that the State Legislature and the governor have responded favorably to our request for lower division developmental funds," Scott added.

THE FINAL budgetary figure was released after conference committee action, necessitated when the House higher education bill included $200,000 more than the earlier passed Senate bill of $2.3 million. Both bills contained funds for the lower division program.

Commenting further on the appropriation, Scott said "the recent action also represents a sincere act of faith on the part of the University of Michigan to see the Dearborn campus expand and grow into a more prominent position in the higher educational pattern of southeastern Michigan."

Dearborn Campus officials are optimistic that the campus will be able to accept its first

Scott said that information on admissions and programs would be ready for dissemination to high school students and counselors early this fall.

Funds for implementing the freshman program have been designated for campus space modification, conversion of some laboratories, curriculum planning and the hiring of staff, the UM-D dean indicated.

Expansion of the campus to include lower division programs and increased graduate offerings was a key recommendation made one year ago by a study group of university administrators, faculty and students, and area citizens.

In approving the expansion plans last fall, University regents indicated that campus development should remain under the auspices of the UM-D. In so doing, the regents delayed a decision on whether the Dearborn campus should at some future date become an autonomous institution. Consideration of future autonomy was also proposed by the study committee.

WITH THE addition of freshmen and sophomores, and an expanded graduate program, university officials feel the Dearborn campus will be able to provide a wider range of course offerings to meet the increasing demands for higher education in southeastern Michigan. A total enrollment of over 9,000 students is anticipated by 1980.

While expressing optimism over the development of the lower division program, Scott emphasized that the "the opening of our freshman year should be regarded in any way as reducing our interest, or commitment to accepting community college and other transfer students at the junior year."

"Because of its 'senior-level' nature, UM-D has relied upon transfer students during its first decade.

"Although the lower division program will be confined within the division of literature, science and the arts, all three campus divisions, including business administration and engineering, will be directly affected by the addition of the lower division," Scott said.

The UM-D dean added that a continued heavy orientation toward community college transfers will be encouraged; however, the students in the lower division program are expected ultimately to transfer either into UM-D's business administration or engineering divisions, or to remain in U.S.A. division for a liberal arts degree.

The Dearborn campus opened in 1959 following the gifts of the Fair Lane Estate property and $6.5 million from the Ford Motor Co. Fund. Operating as a separate college within the university, with a dean as its chief executive officer, the campus has offered instruction in liberal arts, engineering and business administration. A total of 850 junior, senior and graduate students were enrolled in one of the three day-time divisional programs during the 1969 fall semester. University graduate extension and non-credit adult education programs use UM-D facilities during the evening hours.

Plot Safe Fire Course To Make Boating Fun

Plot a fire-safe course to keep the "pleasure" in pleasure boating.

This is the important reminder from the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) to captains, mates and crew members enjoying the nation's fastest-growing recreational activity. The international fire safety organization offers these vital pointers to all week-end sailors:

1. Fueling operations should begin only after all open flames have been extinguished and a strict "No Smoking!" rule enforced. Keep fuel away from ignition sources. Immediately wipe up any fuel that spills or splashes.
2. Portable fuel tanks used with outboard motors should be removed from the boat for refilling. Store extra fuel only in approved safety containers or portable tanks, and never keep reserve supplies in the engine or living compartments.
3. Before starting an inboard motor, ventilate the engine compartment and make sure there is no strong smell of gasoline.
4. Be a good "boatkeeper." Bilge should be free of oil and gasoline. Avoid accumulating rags - especially oily ones - or papers. Keep matches well out of the reach of children.
5. Stoves should be only

- those approved for marine use. When on board, never use a portable stove fueled by liquefied petroleum gas or by gasoline.
  6. Portable heaters are generally unsafe for use on a boat.
- For fire protection purposes, carry the number and type of approved fire extinguishers required for your class boat. Keep extinguishers close at hand or just outside the compartments they are to protect. Be sure they are fully charged and in first-rate working condition at all times.
- "Don't leave fire safety precautions on the pier," says NFPA. "Fire-safe boating habits are real life-savers."
