

The Detroit zoo entrance will look like this after a $7 million renovation. This is a view from Woodward Avenue toward the zoo with the bird house in the background. The Department of Transportation finishes renovating it in 1985. Smith, Hinchman & Grylls Associates of Detroit is the architect.

State to renovate zoo entrance

The Michigan Department of Transportation is seeking bids on a $7 million renovation of the entrance to the Detroit Zoological Park in Royal Oak.

The work is being done in connection with construction of the I-696 (Walter Reuther) freeway across southern Oakland County, MDOT director James Pitz said. It will be completed in 1985.

"This project is much more than a facelift," said Pitz. "The classic architecture and bright new entrance will give a real boost to the zoo's image."

The project will include a 500-car, two-level parking deck to be used both by zoo patrons and riders of the Southeastern Michigan Transportation Authority. Pitz said it will be convenient for commuter parking on weekdays and for zoo patrons on weekends.

The I-696 project took about one acre of zoo property and 11 acres of adjacent Ransom Golf Course property, Pitz said.

In exchange, MDOT is giving the zoo four acres of property east of the zoo, building noise barrier walls, the parking deck and the new zoo entrance. Give holes at the golf course are being reconstructed.

The federal government will pay 80 percent of the cost, with state and local funds covering the remainder, Pitz said.
